Property and affairs: lasting power of attorney FAQs

At a glance

- This type of lasting power of attorney allows you to deal with a person's property and financial affairs.
- Attorneys must always act in the donor's best interests.
- Attorneys must follow the principles set out in the Mental Capacity Act 2005 and its code of practice.
- You can sell the donor's assets, if such a sale is in the donor's best interests and there is no restriction preventing it.
- You may make limited gifts on the donor's behalf, unless there is a restriction preventing gifts.

FAQs about the role of the attorney

What does a property and financial affairs lasting power of attorney (LPA) allow an attorney to do?

It allows you to deal with the property and financial affairs of the person who has made the LPA (the donor). It does not authorise you to make other types of decisions, such as where the donor should live, or whether they should have medical treatment. If the donor has included any restrictions and conditions in the LPA, you are bound by them.

If you have been appointed to act with other attorneys, you may have been appointed to act:

- Jointly, which means that you must always act together.
- Jointly and severally, which means that you may act together, or that any attorney may act independently.
- Jointly for some decisions, and jointly and severally for other decisions. The LPA will stipulate which decisions can be made jointly, and which may be made jointly and severally.

When can an LPA be used?

All LPAs must be registered with the Office of the Public Guardian before they can be used. If you have an LPA that has not been registered, please contact us for advice.

Once registered, an LPA can be used straightaway, subject to any conditions or restrictions that prevent you from acting in particular circumstances.

If the donor is able to make decisions about their property and financial affairs, you should only act with their consent.

If they lose the mental capacity to make decisions about their property and financial affairs, you can make decisions for them.

What are the principles of the Mental Capacity Act 2005?

Attorneys acting under an LPA must follow the principles of the Mental Capacity Act 2005, as well as the Mental Capacity Act Code of Practice.

The main principles are as follows:

- You must assume that the donor can make their own decisions, unless you establish that they cannot do so.
- You must help the donor to make as many of their own decisions as they can. You cannot treat the donor as unable to make a decision unless all practical steps to help them do so have been made, without success.
- You must not treat the donor as unable to make a decision simply because they make an unwise decision.
- You must make decisions and act in the donor's best interests when they are unable to make a decision.
- Before you make the decision in question or act for the donor, you must consider whether you can make the decision or act in a way that is less restrictive of the donor's life and freedom, while still achieving the ultimate goal.

The Code of Practice contains useful practical guidance.

What is meant by acting in a donor's best interests?

If a donor is unable to make a decision for themselves, you must act in their best interests. This means that you must consider all of the relevant circumstances, and in particular:

- The likelihood of the donor recovering in the foreseeable future and being able to make decisions again.
- Ways to involve the donor in the decision, as far as possible.
- The donor's past and present wishes and feelings.
- The donor's beliefs and values.
- Any other factors that the donor would be likely to consider, if they were able to do so.

If practical and appropriate, you should consult carers, relatives, friends and/or other people with an interest in the donor's welfare, such as other attorneys or a court-appointed deputy.

Can an attorney make gifts on the donor's behalf?

The donor may have included a restriction or condition so that you cannot make gifts. If this is not the case, certain gifts can be made as follows:

- To people who are related to or connected to the donor.
- On customary occasions, such as Christmas, birthdays or weddings.
- To a charity, if the donor has made gifts to the charity in the past, or if they might be expected to make gifts to the charity.

In all cases, the size of the gift must be reasonable, including in relation to the total value of the donor's estate. Please remember that the donor may need the asset in the future, so you must be cautious.

Gifts that are not covered by these criteria, including those made for the purposes of tax planning, are not authorised by an LPA. You may, however, be able to make an application to the Court of Protection for the necessary authority: please contact us for advice if you are interested in making such an application.

How should an attorney operate a bank account under an LPA?

This depends on the bank or building society.

If you are able to continue operating the donor's account, you will need to sign your usual signature and add "as attorney" underneath it.

If you are acting as attorney for your spouse or civil partner and have a joint account, you may be able to operate the account as normal.

If you are required to open a new account, it should be opened in your name "as attorney for [name of donor]". You will then be able to use your own signature to operate the account.

Opening an account in your name without identifying that it is an attorney account may cause problems with your own tax affairs or your entitlement to state benefits, and therefore is not recommended.

Do I need to keep accounts?

You have a duty to keep accounts, and we would advise you to keep bank statements and receipts. You may be asked by the Office of the Public Guardian to account for your dealings with the donor's money.

Can I sell the donor's assets?

Yes, if such a sale is in the donor's best interests, and there is no restriction in the LPA preventing a sale.

It may be necessary to check the donor's will if you need to take certain actions, such as selling the house or investments, or closing an account. This is because the donor may have made a gift of the asset in their will. Please contact us for advice if this is the case.

How can we help?

We can provide advice on the following:

- What you can and can't do as an attorney
- Applications to the Court of Protection – the Court of Protection can make decisions on behalf of someone who is mentally incapable of making particular decisions themselves. Applications can be made:

- For a statutory will where the donor has not made a will, or has made a will that is no longer appropriate to their circumstances.
- For authorisation to make certain gifts on the donor's behalf, such as gifts made for tax planning purposes.

- Where there is a dispute about a serious personal welfare issue and the donor has not made a health and welfare LPA.
- Where an attorney appointed under a LPA is no longer able to act, or there are concerns about how they are acting.
- When buying and selling property on behalf of the donor, and regarding tenancy agreements and boundary disputes.
- Resolving disputes and/or bringing claims, including: Inheritance (Provision for Family and Dependents) Act claims, where someone has died without making proper provision for the donor.
- Inheritance (Provision for Family and Dependents) Act claims, where someone has died without making proper provision for the donor.
